

The envelopes, please

The conclusion of the Tour Championship yesterday signals the end of competition on the PGA Tour. And the end is in sight for both the LPGA and Senior PGA circuits.

Just about everything is over for local amateurs and professionals too. Defending champion Bruce Zabriski of Westchester Country Club and Brae Burn Country Club's Ralph Garofano hope to bring back the PGA Assistant Professional Championship, the final national championship of the year conducted by the PGA of America. It starts its 72-hole run today.

With all but the final few important golf shots over for 1996, it is time to unveil our annual awards. Our congratulations to the winners. Better luck next year to those who finished a close second.

RICK REMSNYDER

Club of the year: Wykagyl Country Club. Though cool temperatures in early October kept the galleries smaller than usual for the LPGA's JAL Big Apple Classic, the classy New Rochelle club was a thing of beauty this fall. Golf course superintendent Steve Renzetti and his crew deserve the credit for making Wykagyl an excellent and fair test of golf for the LPGA Tour. How tough was Wykagyl this year? Only the winner — Caroline Pierce — finished in red figures for the 54-hole event.
